Topic- The Control Chart in Process Monitoring

In her speech, she explains the quality concept in the production process. The quality has become a major business strategy. The SSGR chart is used to identify and remove the assignable cause. In Conforming sample and non-conforming sample are used SSGR chart to declare the process in control or out of control. We see the control limit to improve the production process. Corrective actions are taken to identify and estimate. The assignable cause and out of control signals are also declared.

Invited Talk VI

Dr. D. M. Sakate

Associate Professor & Head Department of Statistics & Applied mathematics, Central University of Tamil Nadu, Thiruvavur

In his speech he emphasizes the concept of non parametric test based on RSS. Using field RVP values provides ranking mechanism for selection of much smaller subgroup of gasoline samples to submit for follow-up laboratory analysis.

A sign test is based on RSS data and shown that RSS sign test is more efficient than SRS sign test. The RSS version of FD test statistic is located on invariant and symmetric about point of symmetry when sample sizes are equal. By using real data application checks to the effect of stress of blood pressure of male and female.

Abstract: Snakes belong to class Reptilia and includes venomous and non-venomous snakes. Some venomous and non-venomous snakes mimic each other to protect themselves. However, since these snakes are not known, people consider non-venomous snakes to be venomous and kill them. Snakes are friends of farmers as they act as biocontrol agents in the field. As a result, there should be public awareness about such snakes.

Material & Method: being a snake rescuer, the research was conducted in Satara city within 50 km radius. Identification of all snakes was done by the help of Satara city and their identification was done using literature.
